What is Plagiarism?
Plagiarism is the act of taking another person's writing, conversation, song, or even idea and passing it off as your own. This includes information from web pages, books, songs, television shows, email messages, interviews, articles, artworks or any other medium. Whenever you paraphrase, summarize, or take words, phrases, or sentences from another person's work, it is necessary to indicate the source of the information within your paper using an internal citation. It is not enough to just list the source in a bibliography at the end of your paper. Failing to properly quote, cite or acknowledge someone else's words or ideas with an internal citation is plagiarism.

What is an Internal Citation?
An internal citation refers to the practice of giving credit

Note: Because you are submitting this paper for a non-enrolled student (a student who is not a user and not enrolled in your class), this paper will be available for your use only, and will not be available for use with collaborative learning products such as Peer Review

Plagiarism is the act of taking a work or idea and passing it off as your own. This includes copying text, images, or audio, or paraphrasing, summarizing, or taking ideas without necessary to indicate the source. It is not enough to just list the source; you must properly quote, cite or acknowledge plagiarism.

What is plagiarism?

An internal, in-text, or parenthetical citation, or speaker by citing their name, or a source referenced at the end of your paper.

Internal citations are sometimes placed in parentheses. It's helpful to think of them as borrowed from an author. For every internal citation. Each internal citation should be placed at the end of your paper.

Borrowing the work's structure, or content, is plagiarism. It is important to recognize and cite sources.

Style Guides such as MLA, APA, or Turabian tell you how to cite sources "internally." Below are some web sites that you may also find useful:

What is Plagiarism?

Plagiarism is the act of taking another person's writing, conversation, song, or even idea and passing it off as your own. This includes information from web pages, books, songs, television shows, email messages, interviews, articles, artworks or any other medium. Whenever you paraphrase, summarize, or take words, phrases, or sentences from another person's work, it is necessary to indicate the source of the information within your paper using an internal citation. It is not enough to just list the source in a bibliography at the end of your paper. Failing to properly quote, cite or acknowledge someone else's words or ideas with an internal citation is plagiarism.

What is an Internal Citation?

An internal, in-text, or parenthetical citation refers to the practice of giving credit to an author, singer, or speaker by citing their words/ideas within your paper. This internal citation is then referenced at the end of your paper in your 'Works Cited' list (see below).

Internal citations are sometimes called parenthetical citations because they're enclosed by parentheses. It's helpful to think of internal citations as a kind of "tag" indicating what you've borrowed from an author. For every sentence, phrase or idea you borrow you must "tag" it with an internal citation. Each internal citation is then listed alphabetically in a 'Works Cited' page at the end of your paper.

Borrowing the work's structure, format or style without giving credit is also considered plagiarism. It is important to remember that merely changing the wording is not enough.
