Course description:

The charge that philosophers are detached from reality is as old as Aristophanes's comedic play, The Clouds, where Socrates is ridiculed as someone whose head is in the clouds. In the academe today, philosophy has become synonymous with the ivory tower—an unfortunate title characterized by hubristic smugness, detached from worldly concerns. However, this characterization of philosophy could not be further from the truth. The only barometer that philosophy has is material reality. Against the backdrop of a precarious political milieu, the parasitical ubiquity of neoliberal ideology, the normality of poverty and systemic oppression, and the depressing state of our educational system, the social function of philosophy could not be emphasized enough. The social function of philosophy is an existential weight that we, practitioners and students of philosophy, must carry. However, this entails a decentralization of the commonplace idea of philosophy—from the ivory tower to the margins.

To be able to present what “philosophy at the margins” means, this seminar course will, first, demonstrate that there is a strong intellectual-practical current in the Philippines today that appropriates some important normative tenets of Frankfurt School critical theory. This current has developed over the past decade and is represented by five Filipino intellectuals mainly from the fields of philosophy and cultural anthropology, namely, Karl Gaspar, Agustin Martin Rodriguez, Ranilo Hermida, Renante Pilapil, and Jeffry Ocay. The first step, then, is to survey their respective writings that deal with issues, such as, struggle for and recognition of indigenous cultural identity, governance amidst the multiverse of reason, imagining democracy in the third world, and the possibility of emancipative utopia inspired by local communities. The second step is to show that there is something philosophically and practically fecund that mainstream critical theory could learn from the “margins” of an already marginal country like the Philippines. In other words, the “marginal,” that is to say “peripheral” social groups, as opposed to the mainstream, might offer utopian and practical possibilities for socio-political emancipation. An important feature of this seminar is that it is co-facilitated by Dr. Jeffry Ocay himself, whose recent writings have inspired the phrase, “philosophy at the margins.” Students will, therefore, have an opportunity to engage with Dr. Ocay firsthand, specifically on issues about work, the peasant movement, and the ethics of refusal.
